Hikers need protein. And a few more things, like water, good hiking boots, and legs in shape to power them. Last fall, Wes Schmucker from Star Laser in Millersburg hiked up to McAfee's Knob in Virginia, an outcrop of rock that gives an amazing 270-degree, panoramic view of the surrounding mountains. It's the most photographed spot on the Appalachian Trail, but those photos strike fear into the heart of every mother whose child ventures out onto the unguarded ledge. Wes had packed a large bag of Uncle Mike's Beef Jerky for the hike, and when he got to the top, he shared it with others who had made the climb, creating instant comradery. Hikers also need friends!
