Is it cold, miserable weather that makes them squawkish, or a mean spirit that won't allow them to enjoy sunny days? Birds that stay in the North for the winter are nuisance birds, for the most part. Starlings and sparrows bring no joy. The largest culprit—the Canada goose—was at one time almost extinct; the sight of their V-shaped flight south was a rare treat. Now, they winter wherever they find food and leave a messy calling card. But there are birds that do bring delight in the winter. A bright red cardinal against a snow-covered background is a masterpiece of nature. It's not the weather; it's our approach to life.
