"Have you forgotten something?" It's one thing if that question comes after you return from the grocery store, but a completely different feeling when you're just going around your day as usual. Your mind instantly whirs. You process all the important dates—birthdays, anniversary, dinner appointment? If you end up blank (which you'd better not), you mutter, "Was this the day our dog died?"
Studies prove men are guiltier of this oversight than women, so we sigh it off as absent-mindedness. That doesn't cut it; it's not a genetic deficiency. I always sigh with relief after Mother's Day, because our anniversary isn't until December. And there's no chance I'll forget our son's graduation—that conversation continues daily!
