

Steeper and steeper. I struggled, stopping frequently to catch my breath. My teenage son and I were hiking Colorado's 14ers—mountains 14,000 feet and higher. That day, I was slowing us down. We still had 2,500 feet to the summit, and I knew what must be done. "Go ahead," I said. "I won't make it to the top of this one." Letting go can be difficult. Seasoned by experience, we're assured we're the best person for the job. However, younger, enthusiastic associates are on the best training path when they're guided by our insights but climbing mountains on their own. As my son and I rejoined mid-mountain, tears filled my eyes. He had done it—on his own!
