Are you struggling with eye contact anxiety? Didn't think so—most of our problems aren't problems because we don't know they're a problem. Three simple rules to overcome this anxiety: First, make eye contact before talking to someone—move the eyes before moving the lips. While making contact, move the eyes slowly. And third, never look down when looking away. Instead, look at another part of the face while breaking your gaze to make a gesture or to nod. Why is this important? Last week, I volunteered on the Relief Bus in New York City, serving soup and bread to homeless friends. Food, a smile, and eye contact—these make even a tough street dweller feel cared for.
