It's a simple construction, but it works. The sandwich: meat and cheese, along with your choice of toppings, ketchup, mustard, mayo, peanut butter, or apple slices, carried between two slices of bread, the defining element of a sandwich. Perfect for eating one-handed. A perfect taste ratio. The building of a sandwich reminds me of a life skill a wise person taught me years ago, a tool to use when we need to address someone's unacceptable behavior. First, don't minimize the issue at hand; after all, it's the meat of the problem. However, add two positive compliments, one each side of the dialogue—one before the issue is brought up, one after. Simple construction, but it works.
