You usually dig or mine for gold, but Anderson Mullins found it growing on his farm in West Virginia. In the early 1900s, a unique tree on Mullins' farm produced yellow apples. Folks raved about the fruit, and it attracted the attention of Stark Brothers Nurseries. They purchased the tree and the propagation rights for $5,000 which at the time equaled 250 ounces of gold (worth $475,000 today). Mullins had named this yellow apple the Annit apple. Annit didn't stick (pun intended). Stark Brothers rebranded them Golden Delicious as a companion to their successful Red Delicious brand. They're not related, but they've provided color contrast to kitchen tables and counters for over 100 years. Pure gold and delicious!
